ADM.5134 Media and Society
Instructor: Prof. Dr. Raşit Kaya

Aim of the Course: As members of contemporary societies we share a general view that the role of media in modern life is significantly increasing. However, the nature and the extent of media influence in society is a point of important debate in scholarly accounts as well as popular commentary, casual conversations and daily experiences. The goal of this course is to locate and clarify the fundamental scholarly assumptions as to the role of the media in society viewed from different perspectives and methodologies, in order to make them available for reassessment.

Course Conduct: The students will be initiated to the area of study by lectures in the first three weeks of the semester and required to read the assigned readings. The class will proceed with in class discussions of the select topics in the following weeks.

(Non-Exhaustive) Topic Examples:
Media freedom, Media and the Public Sphere, Theories of Information Society, Popular Culture and the media, media and gender, Public Opinion and Polls, Press and Broadcasting in Turkey, etc.
